Harry Potter, Twilight, The Hunger Games, Where the Wild Things Are......are adults reverting back to their childhoods? Although crossover literature is not a new phenomenon, the proliferation of youth books that are on the bestseller lists and that are nominated for major adult literary awards is. Approximately 5000 youth books are published each year, and even in our hard economic times, youth book sales are still very high. But, why are so many adults (19 and up) reading children's and young adult literature so voraciously? Why now? Good literature is good literature, regardless of its intended audience.

So, what is good youth literature and what isn't? Does it even matter if it's considered good literature as long as you like it? Have you been wanting to pick up a youth book but thought it was frivolous? It's not. Join us in the Youth Collection on Thursday, November 19, 2009, 3:30-5pm, for The Circle, a book discussion group for adults who read youth literature. We will concentrate on the newest books that are published and that arrive in the Youth Collection.

We will discuss the books listed below. You don't have to read them, you can simply come for the discussion, but it will be much more engaging if you read at least two of the books. You can purchase your own copies online or at major bookstores or check out a reserve copy from the library:

- Hook* by Ed Young
- Applesauce Season* by Eden Ross Lipson

Teen Read Week Hunger Games

Teen Read Week is an opportunity for librarians and teachers to promote reading for the fun of it. This year, Congratulations!

Winner of the Family Weekend Drawing

Amjad Albu- UNI senior in

Management Information Systems

Teen Read Week was October 18-October 24 and the theme was Read Beyond Reality. As part of our continued efforts in community outreach, Rod Library, in collaboration with Cedar Falls Public Library and Waterloo Public Library, held the first ever Cedar Valley Hunger Games. The Hunger Games, an overnight information literacy scavenger hunt contest, is based on Suzanne Collins' bestselling young adult novel, The Hunger Games (2008), a dystopian novel in which kids are chosen once every year to battle for their lives. Eight teams competed from middle and high schools across Iowa. Over sixty-five students, faculty, and staff volunteered from UNI as well as community members. Not only did the teens have a wonderful time at Rod Library, but they also collected 518 pounds of food for the Northeast Iowa Food Bank. Reading + Collaboration + Fun = A great community effort!
